Experience

Alex is a current serving Marine Corps Reservist and works on a voluntary and seasonal basis at U.S. Africa Command in Stuttgart, Germany. With fifteen years of experience in the Marine Corps, Alex has worked as an Operations Chief in U.S. Embassies in Africa for the last several years. Alex has worked extensively all over the African continent and Europe conducting military training, interagency coordination, military equipment sales, coordinating human resources activities, and liaising between Department of Defense, Department of State, and host nations.

He has extensive knowledge in all aspects of the security cooperation and logistics industries and has published professional articles on the subject. Alex is experienced in conducting transportation of personnel and equipment and mass logistics operations internationally. Alex coordinated U.S. Secretary of the Navy Ray Maybus' official visit to Chad in 2014. He also conducted logistics for anti-poaching training in eastern Chad that trained over 200 Chadians over a period of 40 days. Alex is a proven performer in providing results and specializes in solving complex problems; he is an experienced diplomat and has received several personal letters of recommendation from current sitting U.S. Ambassadors.

In the civil sector, Alex has worked on a number of environmental services projects at healthcare facilities and greatly excels at operations, human capital process, driving quality, and forging strong working relationships with clients and employees. He also has extensive experience working through human resources issues and project management, and is currently in the process of obtaining his PMP (Project Management Professional) certification from the Project Management Institute.
